

What makes a competent paramedic?

Collaboration

- Works professionally and effectively with others
- Interacts respectfully and avoids or resolves conflicts
- Safely transfers patients to other paramedics or health professionals

Learning and Adapting

- Educates students, colleagues, the public
- Keeps up with research and practice guidelines
- Commits to ongoing learning and professional development

Communication

- Communicates with compassion and respect
- Respects privacy, confidentiality, and seeks consent prior to acting
- Prepares clear and accurate records

Health

- Takes care of their physical, mental, and social health and well-being
- Acts on warning signs of personal ill health
- Supports the health and well-being of team members

Professionalism

- Demonstrates ethical practice and high standards of professional behaviour
- Is accountable
- Acts according to relevant laws, standards, rules, and regulations

Advocacy

- Responds to the needs of patients, communities, and populations
- Supports an environment where people feel safe and are treated fairly
- Promotes healthy behaviours in patients and their families

Care

- Makes decisions based on evidence
- Provides safe, effective, ethical assessments, care planning, treatment, and transfer of care
- Is guided by the patient's preferences, needs, and values

Leadership

- Acts as a role model for colleagues and new paramedics
- Thinks critically and solves problems
- Supports a culture that promotes practice improvement and patient safety

Scan for more information or to download additional documents.

copr.ca

Ce document est disponible en français.

COPR

Canadian Organization of Paramedic Regulators

OCRP

Organisation canadienne des régulateurs paramédicaux